Rules of thumb.

Dos:
Clarify which products and services you are selling. For example, if you are creating your own site, create separate pages for Payanywhere and Inovio.

Monitor the comments on your social pages. If a merchant has an issue or question you are unable to answer, direct them to the official brand social pages for the correct customer service contacts.

Be factual and honest when creating marketing materials.

Send marketing materials and websites you create on your own to your Partner Relations Advisor for approval.

Do nots:
Edit, modify, or recreate brand elements, such as logos, approved images, and proper language.

Use domain names similar to the North name or its associate brands and products, use metatags, or purchase key terms on search engines that may be similar to our marks.

Represent yourself as official on social media outlets. Do make it clear you are an independent Sales Partner representing North and its family of products.

Make false claims about North or your competitors in marketing materials.

Combining products and services.

When referencing North elements to show that you are selling a product or service of ours, you must be explicit in imagery and content to indicate you are a Sales Partner representing North.

There are instances where you'll want to advertise more than one North product or service as part of your sales pitch. Below are brief descriptions of each of the products that you can sell under the North family of brands. Remember, although you can sell each of these under North, proper brand elements must be used when referencing one of the below in relation to North. For more in-depth guidelines for each brand, please reach out to your Partner Relations Advisor or the North Marketing Team.
